INTRODUCTORY NOTE

ALTHOUGH "The Weaker Sex" was produced in London but a month before "The Profligate" first saw the light, and just a year after "Sweet Lavender," it really belongs to an earlier period of Mr. Pinero's work, indeed its composition may be said to date between "Lords and Commons" and the Court series of farces. It was this play, as I have stated elsewhere, that Mr. Pinero offered to Mr. John Clayton and Mr. Arthur Cecil, when in the winter of 1884 they appealed to him in their sore need for a piece, their management of the Court being at that time in anything but a flourishing condition, and it was only Mr. Clayton's uncertainty about "The Weaker Sex" that led to Mr. Pinero offering "The Magistrate" in its place, a turn of events which proved most fortunate for the Court management. Meanwhile "The Weaker Sex" was laid by for about four years, when Mr. and Mrs. Kendal secured the rights of the play, and produced it tentatively at the Theatre Royal, Manchester, on September 28, 1888. The result was so encouraging that when, after their tour, Mr. and Mrs. Kendal arranged with Mrs. John Wood to take the new Court Theatre for a season in the spring of 1889, they signalised their reappearance in town by the production of Mr. Pinero's comedy. It was on Saturday, March 16, 1889, that this play was first seen in London, but it must be noted that it was not presented here exactly as it had been in Manchester, for after the provincial trial Mr. Pinero abolished the conventional "happy ending" he had originally contrived, which was found to be unsatisfactory, and printed the play as it is now printed.

THE NEW SCENERY BY MR. THOMAS W. HALL.

The success achieved in London was fair, though not great, and after a satisfactory run of some weeks the play was withdrawn ; but on their provincial tours Mr. and Mrs. Kendal have always found "The Weaker Sex" received with marked favour, while in America they have played it continuously with very great success, and it still holds its own.

THE WEAKER SEX

THE FIRST ACT

The Scene is the Library in MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON'S house in Sussex Gardens, Regent's Park, the windows opening on to the garden, and giving a view of the ornamental water beyond. The room is handsomely but rather gloomily furnished, and books and newspapers are scattered everywhere, the whole place wearing a busy aspect. On one wall is a large printed poster, as follows :

UNION OF INDEPENDENT WOMEN.

A GREAT PUBLIC MEETING

Under the auspices of the Union, will be held at the ST. SIMON'S HALL, PICCADILLY,
ON MONDAY, MAY 5TH,

Having for its object a Demonstrative Assertion of the Rights of Women to share the Privileges and Penalties of the other Sex in all Spheres of Life.

THE WEAKER SEX

The Chair will be taken at 8 o'clock by MRS. E. BOYLE-CHEWTON, M.L.S.B.

The following Speakers will address the Meeting ;

LADY VIVASH,

Miss Anna W. Perkyn, from Montreal ; Mrs. McOstrich ;

Miss Awke ; Mrs. Clymper-Boosby ; and

MR. BARGUS,

M.P. for Skipping-Molton,

Who will take this opportunity to declare his adherence to

A MIGHTY AND IRRESISTIBLE MOVEMENT

All are invited !

Women ! bring Decent, Rational Thinking Men

NO INFANTS

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON, a woman of about forty, with a not unpleasing face but a rigid personality, her hair worn straight and short and her costume severe, dowdy and ungainly, sits writing at one end of a writing-table, while at the other her daughter RHODA, a pretty girl of about nineteen, dressed in the same fashion, dozes with a pen in her hand, but hidden from her mother by the stationery cabinet.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Taking up the letter she has been writing and surveying it critically.] I think I make myself understood. Listen, Rhoda. I have thought it expedient to adapt myself to this pugilistic person's phraseology. [Reading.] "Mrs. E. Boyle-Chewton accepts the offer of Mr. Robert Saunders of Endell Street, Bloomsbury, to supply her with four 'chuckers-out' for the great meeting to-night at the St. Simon's Hall." A chucker-out, my dear Rhoda, is Mr. Saunders's definition of a person who ejects disorderly characters. [Resuming.] "Mrs. Boyle-Chewton does not think 'five shillings a nob' at all exorbitant, but must decline the proffered services of Mrs. Robert Saunders, for while fully grasping Mr. Saunders's assurance that his wife is upon a physical equality with 'ten men and a boy,' Mrs. Boyle-Chewton doubts whether this particular branch of enterprise should be included in woman's furthest ambitions." Um—yes—that provides for any fractious opposition, I think. [Enclosing and addressing the letter.] Have you copied the plan of to-night's proceedings? [Impatiently.] Rhoda! [Discovering that RHODA is asleep.] Good gracious! Rhoda, you're asleep?

RHODA.

[Waking with a start.] Oh! I—I must have closed my eyes.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

I am ashamed of you!

RHODA.

I beg your pardon, Mamma. It is the heat, I think.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Heat! It will be hotter at the meeting! You've no enthusiasm!

RHODA.

I have been sitting since eight o'clock this morning. I gobbled my breakfast. [Thumping her chest.] I can feel it here now.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

I'm not surprised—you had four cutlets. I have been sitting upon two eggs.

RHODA.

[Giving MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON a paper.] There, the plans are finished.

PETCH, a middle-aged woman-servant, grim and shapeless, enters the room.

PETCH.

Mr. Silchester!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Impatiently.] Oh dear, oh dear!

[DUDLEY SILCHESTER, a fashionably-dressed handsome-bearded man of about forty, enters breezily.]

DUDLEY.

[Kissing MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.] Good morning, Edith.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Good morning, brother Dudley.

DUDLEY.

[Kissing RHODA.] Well, Rhoda dear?

RHODA.

Well, Uncle Dud?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Giving letter and plan to PETCH.] That letter by cab to Endell Street. Lay the paper on the Committee Room table. [PETCH goes out.]

DUDLEY.

[To RHODA.] You look tired.

RHODA.

Hush!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

I daresay we all look tired, Dudley. You know what to-night is?

DUDLEY.

I think—Monday night.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Waving her hand towards the bill.] The night of our Great Meeting.

DUDLEY.

[Looking at the bill.] Oh yes, of course, our great Meeting. Sorry an old engagement to play whist at the Club will prevent my—— It suggests the Circus.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

I call those names.

DUDLEY.

Yes—I daresay other people will call them names in the course of the evening.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

It will be a Monster Meeting.

DUDLEY.

What's that—meeting of monsters?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Dudley! If you come to my house merely to——

DUDLEY.

Beg pardon, Edith. [Producing a letter.] I dropped in to show you this.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Opening the letter.] Rhoda, your Uncle is offered the appointment of Consul at Palermo! What a very excellent thing! Through whom?

DUDLEY.

Lord Gillingham, I fancy.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Ah, Lady Vivash, dear Mary, must have gained his influence for you.

RHODA.

Oh, I'm so glad, Uncle Dud—and so sorry.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

£600 a year—that's more than your services are worth, Dudley.

DUDLEY.

Yes—or ever will be.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Why, you're surely not going to——

DUDLEY.

Accept it? Certainly not.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Refuse it! When you've never done a real stroke of work in your life.

DUDLEY.

Never had anybody to work for.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

You've had yourself.

DUDLEY.

Oh, everybody's had me at one time or another. I don't reckon myself.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

The epitaph of every wasted career. Why not go to Palermo?

DUDLEY.

Can't get away just now.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

You've nothing to do in London.

DUDLEY.

That's it—if I had I should be glad to go to Palermo.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

I know. I can read you like a book, brother Dudley.

DUDLEY.

I'm sure you can, sister Edith. The intelligent world has read me like a book at least for the last quarter of a century. It has read me, thumbled me, cut me—ah, yes, cut me—and made brutal marginal notes upon me, until I am the soiled, dogeared volume so out of keeping with your immaculate library.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Rhoda, leave me with your uncle for a few moments.

RHODA.

Yes, Mamma.

DUDLEY.

Have mercy, Edith! [To RHODA.] Keep within earshot in case I shriek for assistance.

[RHODA goes out into the garden where for a while she is seen at intervals walking to and fro reading.]

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Dudley, you will decline to go to Palermo because you are still hankering after your old sweetheart, Lady Vivash. If I'm wrong, say No. [DUDLEY reflects for a moment, smilingly looks at MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON, and then without a word drops into an armchair.] Ah, I thought so! Dudley, of all the extravagant, hopeless passions man ever had for woman your attachment to my old schoolfellow and present colleague, Mary Vivash, is the most senseless my mind can grasp!

DUDLEY.

My dear Edith, a respectful affection, which commenced on my side for your school-mate, Mary Norbury, as she then was, about twenty years ago, is hardly deserving of such severe stricture. It has at least the merit of antiquity; give it as much respect as you would afford an Anglo-Roman Tumulus or an ancient Greek coin.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

It began most absurdly.

DUDLEY.

It began by my bringing English toffee to the little pension at Bruges where you were monitress, and Mary Norbury, a child of fifteen, was fourth scholar.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

I thought it was ridiculous then !

DUDLEY.

You took your share of the toffee ; and oh what toffee ! Life has given me since nothing so sweet as that cooked sugar we portioned out twenty years ago on the side-paths of those old canals.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

And then, Dudley, after all——

DUDLEY.

All that toffee—tons of it.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

After all—she refused you !

DUDLEY.

Um—in favour of a brighter, better, cleverer fellow—my friend, Philip Lyster.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

And Philip Lyster she quarrelled with—marrying old Lord Vivash a month afterwards in a fit of mad rage.

DUDLEY.

He's gone—thank goodness.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Yes—and she's had enough of marriage to last her a lifetime.

DUDLEY.

She hasn't told me that.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

My dear brother, even if she did think of marrying again, her mind would go back—to whom do you imagine?

DUDLEY.

I thought perhaps to——

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

To you! Fiddlesticks! To her only real love, Philip Lyster, whose heart she broke.

DUDLEY.

Where is he? In Heaven, for all we know.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Nonsense, you men don't go there so surely. You see, my dear Dudley, you haven't a ghost of a chance. Besides, your conduct is cruel to me.

DUDLEY.

My dear Edith !

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

You know what I have at heart—the Advancement of Women from the Rear to the Van !

DUDLEY.

[Nervously putting on his gloves.] Yes—I think, Edith, you've before explained——

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Our recruit, Lady Vivash, supplies the impetus this great movement requires. She is now a strong, self-reliant, fine-minded creature——

DUDLEY.

She is.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

She is still young, brilliant, and enthusiastic——

DUDLEY.

That's true !

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

✓ With beauty and a title—which oughtn't to count, but it does !

DUDLEY.

I should think so.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Since she has thrown her soul in with us we have not only doubled our women supporters, but we are securing fickle, fluctuating, flabby men!

DUDLEY.

Are you!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

And now when she has taken up her abode under my roof and is a necessity to our cause, to see you idling here—nursing your old affection, like a dilet-tante with a cracked china jar!—it must be most distracting to her, as it is annoying to me.

DUDLEY.

Cracked jar! You are right, it is cracked! only the scent of the roses or the smell of the ginger, or whatever was in it, will linger—dash it, it will linger.

LADY VIVASH, a beautiful woman of about thirty-five, dressed with the most rigid simplicity, but without any sacrifice of grace or dignity, enters quickly from the garden.

LADY VIVASH.

At what time is the Committee, dear? [Giving her hand pleasantly to DUDLEY.] How do you do, Mr. Silchester? We are gloriously busy. You have come to scoff, of course.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Committee at one; there's half-an-hour yet.

LADY VIVASH.

Have any of our ladies arrived?

DUDLEY.

I think so.

LADY VIVASH.

Indeed?

DUDLEY.

I saw some goloshes in the hall as I came in.

LADY VIVASH.

I wear goloshes in the damp weather. Perhaps they are mine.

DUDLEY.

Perhaps; I didn't know at first whether they were goloshes.

LADY VIVASH.

What did you take them for?

DUDLEY.

Gondolas.

LADY VIVASH.

Oh! [Writing busily.] After all, the size of a woman's foot is quite immaterial. A woman doesn't carry her heart in her boots.

DUDLEY.

She does—if you say “Boo!” in the dark.

LADY VIVASH.

That's your opinion of women—not mine.

DUDLEY.

Because you're not a man.

LADY VIVASH.

I wish I were, for a month.

DUDLEY.

I daresay you do—a jolly month you'd have of it.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Dudley!

DUDLEY.

What I mean, my dear Edith, is that a month would enable dear Lady Vivash to taste the sweets and not the bitters of manhood; to wrench, as it were, the door knocker of adolescence without paying the forty shillings of maturity. I have been a grown man for twenty years out of my forty, and the result is that I wish sincerely——

LADY VIVASH.

You wish you had been born a woman!

DUDLEY.

No—a quadruped. A beast is short-lived?

PETCH enters.

PETCH.

Mr. Bargus is in the Committee Room.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Oh, here's Mr. Bargus! Dudley, how fortunate you are—you shall make his acquaintance. [To PETCH.] Ask Mr. Bargus to come here.

[PETCH goes out.

DUDLEY.

Bargus! Who's Bargus!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

You don't read your parliamentary reports, Dudley.

DUDLEY.

Never.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Mr. Bargus is the new Member for the Skipping-Molton Division of Cuddleford. We have secured him.

DUDLEY.

Secured him? Is he a very violent M.P.?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

He is young—as a politician, a mere infant. We have undertaken, as it were, to nurse him—to form his ideas.

DUDLEY.

Kind of political baby-farmers.

LADY VIVASH.

As you please. We women need help in the House.

DUDLEY.

Wouldn't a charwoman——?

LADY VIVASH.

In the House of Commons. We want a lever to raise the mountain of prejudice. We looked about us and our eye rested upon—upon——

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

The Member for the Skipping-Molton Division of Cuddleford.

RHODA enters quickly, thinking DUDLEY is alone.

RHODA.

Oh, Uncle Dud, here's that ridiculous little Bergus!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Rhoda!

RHODA.

Oh, Mamma!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Ridiculous Bergus! To whom do you allude?

RHODA.

I am afraid I meant Mr. Bergus, Mamma; I—I have taken rather a—not a fancy to Mr. Bergus.

[PETCH announces "MR. BARGUS." BARGUS enters. He is a chubby little gentleman of about forty, with a foolish face and a large development of forehead, and his fair hair worn in tight little curls all over his head, giving him the appearance of a middle-aged Cupid.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

My dear Mr. Bargus, your name was on our lips.

BARGUS.

Very gratified.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Are you armed for the fray to-night?

BARGUS.

I think so. I rehearsed my speech yesterday to an invalid cousin with most gratifying results. Good morning, Lady Vivash. Good morning, Miss Chewton. [Catching DUDLEY'S eye and bowing.] An enthusiast, I hope?

LADY VIVASH.

Mr. Silchester—Mr. Clarence Bargus.

DUDLEY.

How dy'e do?

BARGUS.

How dy'e do?

DUDLEY.

You're nervous about to-night—this big meeting, eh? Funkey, just a little?

BARGUS.

It's an ordeal. A friend of mine, interested in Women, had two reticules and a vinaigrette thrown at him last week, at Barnchester.

[Dabbing his brow with his handkerchief.]

LADY VIVASH.

[To DUDLEY.] Great head, isn't it?

DUDLEY.

Big head—one of the biggest I've ever seen.

LADY VIVASH.

He's the son of Bargus, the large weaver.

DUDLEY.

Large weaver—that accounts for it.

LADY VIVASH.

Of course he's timid and provincial at present, but he'll float.

DUDLEY.

That head ought to keep him up. Couldn't you get a more imposing champion?

LADY VIVASH.

We have others who are—different looking. But Mr. Bargus is all our own.

[Joins MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON and BARGUS.

DUDLEY.

Oh, I don't want any. [To RHODA.] So you don't cotton to the political baby, Rhoda?

RHODA.

No. You won't say anything if I tell you something funny about him, will you.

DUDLEY.

Honour bright.

RHODA.

Do you know that when Mamma and Lady Vivash are not looking, little Bargus—he—he——

DUDLEY.

Well?

RHODA.

He does his best to flirt with me.

DUDLEY.

Oh, the forward infant! I should like to do my best to slap him.

RHODA.

Oh, no, don't. I hate little Bargus, but I'm wretchedly dull here! Nobody ever comes to the house but gentlemanly women and zoological looking men—even Bargus is a relief.

BARGUS.

[To LADY VIVASH and MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.] I have plunged into this great subject of Woman after anxious deliberation. I looked about me in the House, and I saw every man metaphorically waving a banner. One member is for everything—another is against everything. One is for opening everything on a Sunday—another is for closing everything always. I said to myself, “Bargus, what are you going to do to repay the confidence of 8570 constituents of the Skipping-Molton Division of Cuddleford?” and in answer came the flapping of wings and your voices, ladies, saying: "Inscribe the word Woman upon your banner and march forth!"

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Oh, Mr. Bergus, are you going to say anything like that to-night.

BARGUS.

[Dabbing his forehead.] Well, that's a little bit out of what I am going to say to-night.

RHODA.

[To DUDLEY, pointing out of window.] Why, look at those Gibson girls out there, playing lawn tennis.

DUDLEY.

They have spotted noses.

RHODA.

I know—but I envy them the frocks they wear, the partners that feed them with strawberries and cream, the dances, the theatres, everything! They lead girl's lives!

DUDLEY.

Tush! Your turn will come.

RHODA.

Will it! What about Lady Vivash's child, Sylvia, who is younger than I, and travelling in Italy with Lady Gillingham? Italy! Fancy! Is her turn to come? Without ever having seen Sylvia Vivash, I detest her!

DUDLEY.

Hush ! She's a mere child.

RHODA.

Which I've never been ! I've always been a woman with Rights ! Oh, Uncle Dudley, I've a big right—to be very, very miserable !

PETCH enters.

PETCH.

The Committee's here—Mrs. McOstrich, Mrs. Boosby, and Mrs. Awke.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Thank you, Petch. Mr. Bargus, pray follow me. Lady Vivash, please ! Rhoda, bring the Minute Book into the Committee Room.

[PETCH goes out, then MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

RHODA is following with an immense book which she has taken from the writing-table, when BARGUS stops her.

BARGUS.

Miss Chewton—will you allow me ?

[Taking the book from her.

RHODA.

Oh thank you, Mr. Bargus.

BARGUS.

[In an undertone.] May I ask you if you are fond of flowers, Miss Chewton? If so, I should much like——

RHODA.

I've very fond of them, but Mamma says wearing flowers is frivolous and unhealthy.

BARGUS.

Oh, then, Miss Chewton, if to-night my speech happens to develop some trifling little oratorical blossoms will you wear them in your memory, Miss Chewton?

DUDLEY.

[Watching them.] H'm! Getting over that nervousness, Mr. Bargus?

BARGUS.

Fairly, sir, thank you.

DUDLEY.

Thought so.

[BARGUS goes out, followed by RHODA. LADY VIVASH, who has been looking into the garden, crosses to the door.]

LADY VIVASH.

Good-bye, Mr. Silchester.

DUDLEY.

Lady Vivash, will you spare me a moment?

LADY VIVASH.

You won't ask me for more, will you?

DUDLEY.

[Handing her the letter which MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON had read.] I think I have to thank you for that.

LADY VIVASH.

[Reading the letter.] Oh, the offer of the Consulship at Palermo. I am so glad. [Returning him the letter.] I did indeed suggest to Lord Gillingham that if he knew of anything that would—that would——

DUDLEY.

That would get an idle, troublesome, old friend out of your way——

LADY VIVASH.

I am sorry I have hurt you, Mr. Silchester.

DUDLEY.

You do want me to go, then?

LADY VIVASH.

I think it would be better for you.

DUDLEY.

I couldn't go—alone.

LADY VIVASH.

Isn't Griggs with you still?

DUDLEY.

My servant—yes. But somehow when Griggs has brushed my coat and my hat and played with my boot-trees for half an hour every morning, there's still a sense of loneliness in life. [She turns away from him, leaning against the mantelpiece.] Mary! Mary!

LADY VIVASH.

[After a pause.] Yes?

DUDLEY.

Come with me to Palermo.

LADY VIVASH.

Thank you very much, but your sister Edith and I are so engrossed in our work here that we can't take a holiday just now.

DUDLEY.

It isn't a part of my suggestion that we should disturb Edith.

LADY VIVASH.

I think I must go into the Committee Room.

DUDLEY.

[Standing before her, clasping his hands.] Mary, do—do marry me. I have waited. I am your oldest friend—make me your newest love. For the sake of your little Sylvia, whom I will cherish as if she were my own, be my wife! For your sake, be my wife! For my sake, be my wife!

LADY VIVASH.

I am very sorry, Dudley, but—I cannot.

DUDLEY.

Cannot give up this life you have chosen? Oh, Mary, what a mistake—what a waste!

LADY VIVASH.

A mistake, perhaps. I may be too weak a woman, mind and body, to fight the great battle for my sisters. But a waste—no! Why, if I dropped in the effort to raise those who are slighted, ignored, misunderstood, the effort to put upon a conspicuous pillar intellects whose light would illumine the whole world, if I dropped in my struggle to do this, it would be a sacrifice—not a waste.

DUDLEY.

A woman's only battles should be those of her husband, the intellects she should develop are those of her children. Ah, all you find in this new life is mere buzz and noise—forgetfulness of the wretched years of your mistaken marriage.

LADY VIVASH.

Mr. Silchester!

DUDLEY.

If the task you have undertaken is so fit and so noble, why isn't your daughter Sylvia by your side to share it?

LADY VIVASH.

Sylvia! my dear little Sylvia!

DUDLEY.

Why isn't she under your wing?

LADY VIVASH.

I think a young girl needs a different atmosphere. I mean, Lady Gillingham was going to Italy, and offered to—I thought it best that Lady Gillingham should—Oh, Sylvia has no troubles to forget!

DUDLEY.

I am right then!

LADY VIVASH.

And if you are--if what I am searching for is but a sort of intoxication, an oblivion—how could you, with your reminder of the past, help me?

DUDLEY.

By devoting myself to you—by loving away the memory of your misfortunes.

LADY VIVASH.

[After hiding her face for a moment.] Dudley! [He stands by her side; she looks up to him and takes his hand.] Thank you, dear old friend. But—it is so impossible.

DUDLEY.

Don't you love me at all?

LADY VIVASH.

Yes, I do love you—but don't you guess that I can't forget——?

DUDLEY.

Philip Lyster!

LADY VIVASH.

Philip Lyster. Ah, Dudley—brother, if you will be that—it is years ago, but I loved Philip so well. Eighteen years ago, and oh, the freshness of it all to-day!

DUDLEY.

You parted, not friends.

LADY VIVASH.

A boy-and-girl quarrel, with the girl in the wrong. He was tender, chivalrous, sensitive—I, wilful, capricious, cruel!

DUDLEY.

He left England?

LADY VIVASH.

I heard so. And then came my sin—heaven forgive me!—marrying another to spite the man my temper had driven away from me.

DUDLEY.

You suffered!

LADY VIVASH.

I deserved it. Child as I was, I deserved it. But he, so beyond me; why should I have ruined his life? There, Dudley, is the misery that destroys my peace. The news of my marriage must have reached him in some foreign country. I can see it coming to him, without a word of warning, through some newspaper. I can hear his bitter cry of contempt for the girl he had loved. Sometimes I think he must be dead, and I picture him dying, lonely, uncared for. And sometimes I think he lives on, old, broken, a misanthrope, the name of woman the only jest to draw a smile from him. [She turns away crying.]

DUDLEY.

Ah—so that's your answer, Mary. My old friend Philip still stands between you and me.

LADY VIVASH.

Still—always——

Enter PETCH with a telegram.

PETCH.

A telegram, please.

[DUDLEY takes it from the salver.]

DUDLEY.

I beg your pardon—Lady Vivash.

[Giving the telegram to LADY VIVASH. PETCH goes out. LADY VIVASH reads the telegram.]

LADY VIVASH.

Oh!

DUDLEY.

Nothing wrong, I hope?

LADY VIVASH.

Wrong? No! [Brushing the tears from her eyes.]

Listen! Listen! It is from Victoria—you know—Lady Gillingham! It says: [reading] “Our letters written to you at San Remo just discovered at the bottom of a trunk—never posted—we are home—shall come on to you!” Dudley, my Sylvia, my little girl, is in London, and I didn’t know! [Excitedly.] Advise me. What shall I do? Shall I go to Lady Gillingham’s? I may miss them—they may not be there. I want to see Sylvia so badly! [Stamping her foot.] Dudley, you don’t tell me what to do.

DUDLEY.

[Shaking his head.] Oh, you strong-minded woman!

LADY VIVASH.

I’m not! I mean I haven’t seen her for so long.

DUDLEY.

They’re sure to be here almost directly.

LADY VIVASH.

What am I to do till almost directly?

DUDLEY.

There’s the Committee downstairs.

LADY VIVASH.

[Impatiently.] Oh!

DUDLEY.

And your speech to prepare for to-night.

LADY VIVASH.

I can't think of anything now but Sylvia!

DUDLEY.

No—and it is from this material that we are to mould our Cabinet Ministers of the future!

The door opens and MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON,
MR. BARGUS, and RHODA enter.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

My dear Mary, you are forgetting the business of to-day entirely.

LADY VIVASH.

I've had a telegram from Lady Gillingham.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Indeed! The Committee think it advisable——

LADY VIVASH.

Lady Gillingham and Sylvia are in London!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Very sudden. The Committee think that you and Mr. Bergus——

LADY VIVASH.

They have been found at the bottom of a trunk.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Lady Gillingham and Sylvia!

LADY VIVASH.

No, no!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Then who has been found at the bottom of a trunk?

LADY VIVASH.

Their letters—advising me of their return home.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

How careless! The Committee——

LADY VIVASH.

Never posted—fancy!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

My dear Mary!

LADY VIVASH.

[Handing MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON the telegram.]
There it is.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Taking the telegram without reading it.] Thank you. The Committee have expressed an opinion——

LADY VIVASH.

Oh, do read the telegram! [MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON reads the telegram. To RHODA.] You'll be friends with my Sylvia, won't you? Her pet name is Gossamer—she is so light and bright and merry.

RHODA.

[Thoughtfully.] Bright and merry!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

I've never heard of such negligence. [Returning the telegram.] Women like Lady Gillingham are our stumbling-blocks. Oh, for more concrete minds! Mr. Bargus, will you explain to Lady Vivash?

BARGUS.

The Committee suggest that we compare the salient features of our speeches, Lady Vivash, to avoid a collision of ideas. I shall be delighted——

LADY VIVASH.

[Absently, as she re-reads the telegram.] Quite so—yes—certainly.

BARGUS.

Shall I rapidly float over the surface of my intentions, or will you?

LADY VIVASH.

You—you first, please.

BARGUS.

Thank you. [Producing a roll of paper.] The question is in a nutshell. The position of Woman is a social anomaly.

LADY VIVASH.

Two women wouldn't travel all night from Paris to London, would they? Oh, I beg your pardon.

BARGUS.

Quite so. I ask—of what is woman capable?

LADY VIVASH.

[Pondering.] Sleeping at Dover—rising early—and catching the first train to town—that's what they've done!

BARGUS.

Pardon me, Lady Vivash, I don't see——

LADY VIVASH.

No—of course—I haven't shown it to you, have I? [Handing him the telegram.] Lady Gillingham's telegram.

BARGUS..

But this doesn't say anything about the Meeting!

LADY VIVASH.

You don't read it—we shall meet here.

BARGUS.

But the Union of Independent Women?

LADY VIVASH.

Oh, don't bother about that!

Enter PETCH.

PETCH.

Lady Gillingham and Miss Vivash!

LADY VIVASH.

Sylvia! Sylvia!

[BARGUS retires in astonishment. SYLVIA, a pretty, simple, fair-haired girl, about seventeen, dressed very lightly and tastefully, runs on, and is clasped in LADY VIVASH'S arms; LADY GILLINGHAM, a handsomely-dressed woman of thirty-three or thereabouts, with an elegant carriage and pleasing manner, following. PETCH goes out.

LADY VIVASH.

My dear little Gossamer! Oh, how pretty you look! My sweet! [Kissing LADY GILLINGHAM.] Victoria, dear, how are you? What a surprise you give me! Lady Gillingham, Sylvia—you have met Mrs. Boyle-Chewton, haven't you? You both know Mr. Silchester. Rhoda! This is Sylvia.

[The two girls look at each other with curiosity.

SYLVIA.

[Putting out her hand shyly.] How do you do?

[RHODA takes her hand and then turns to DUDLEY.

RHODA.

[To DUDLEY.] What luck some girls have, Uncle Dud.

SYLVIA.

[To LADY VIVASH.] Mamma, how strange you all look!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[With a heave of resignation.] I think I had better hear Mr. Bargus's plans for to-night. I fancy some of us are not sufficiently sympathetic towards Mr. Bargus. [To BARGUS.] Will you walk into the garden? That will enable Lady Vivash to chat over lighter matters with Lady Gillingham.

[MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON and BARGUS go out through the window, and are seen at intervals walking up and down and conversing earnestly.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

[Quietly to LADY VIVASH.] Send Sylvia away; I want to speak to you.

LADY VIVASH.

Is anything wrong?

LADY GILLINGHAM.

I hope you won't think so.

LADY VIVASH.

Rhoda, will you show Sylvia the garden?

[RHODA and SYLVIA go towards the window.

SYLVIA.

[Catching sight of the printed bill.] Oh, what's that? Is Mamma going to sing at a concert?

LADY VIVASH.

[Stamping her foot.] Oh!

DUDLEY.

[To LADY VIVASH.] I'll explain—nicely.

[He follows RHODA and SYLVIA out into the garden.]

LADY GILLINGHAM.

My dear Mary, I am afraid you will be very angry with me.

LADY VIVASH.

What has happened?

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Something very dreadful, or very pleasant—just as you take it.

LADY VIVASH.

Oh, Victoria!

LADY GILLINGHAM.

You entrusted dear little Gossamer to my charge, and I need not tell you that I have tried to do my duty.

LADY VIVASH.

Yes, yes, yes!

LADY GILLINGHAM.

You know, dear, they say Love laughs at locksmiths; that he may do, but he certainly ignores chaperons.

LADY VIVASH.

Love! What do you mean?

LADY GILLINGHAM.

I knew you would be angry; but it is not my fault. Gossamer is in love, dear—there!

LADY VIVASH.

Gossamer in love! Gossamer in love! And, of course, somebody is in love with her?

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Oh yes, dear, of course—that happened first.

LADY VIVASH.

Who—who is it?

LADY GILLINGHAM.

There, Mary, you've upset me with your first question. Who is it? I suppose from an old-fashioned point of view I ought to say, Nobody. But Lord Gillingham says that nowadays everybody with a coat and waist-coat is somebody, especially if he be an American, and this gentleman is an American.

LADY VIVASH.

An American?

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Yes, from Vermont. But he doesn't of course whittle a stick or do those amusing things we read about. Have you ever heard of Ira Lee, the American poet ?

LADY VIVASH.

I don't know—I daresay—I can't remember.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Get him from Mudie's, Mary, at once. Gossamer's lover is Ira Lee. We met him in Florence at Mrs. Rocksavage's. Of course he was smitten with Sylvia ; every one has been, from a Charing Cross porter to the Pope.

LADY VIVASH.

But she—she ?

LADY GILLINGHAM.

She was only interested at first, till she read his poetry and then—well, get him from Mudie's. I heard a portion of his history—quite romantic. Some time ago he banished himself out West into the Colorado Mountains, leading a sort of camp life with some horribly rough outcast people—fancy, Mary ! A thing I couldn't do ! Then he wrote plaintive verses about the wrongs of the Indians and their loves, until an enterprising person came along and bought his poetry, or borrowed it—I forget which—and published it in New York. And there they christened him the Poet of the Prairies. And now he's rich, and I suppose has had enough of the Indians, who are a very untidy race, and he is seeing Europe. There, Mary ; what do you think of it all ?

[BARGUS is seen rehearsing his speech to MRS.
BOYLE-CHEWTON outside the window.]

LADY VIVASH.

Tell me—tell me what you have done !

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Well, dear, I have done what I consider the very wisest thing—I have done nothing. Mr. Lee gave me to understand that he admired Sylvia—she gave me to understand that she loved Mr. Lee. I said, “ Very well, then, we’ll go home.”

LADY VIVASH.

And he ?

LADY GILLINGHAM.

He said, “ Do—and I’ll follow you.”

LADY VIVASH.

Oh, what shall I do ?

LADY GILLINGHAM.

See him, dear.

LADY VIVASH.

See him !

LADY GILLINGHAM.

He’s most anxious to do everything in formâ—what is it ? not pauperis—proprietas ; in formâ proprietas. See him, and accept him or reject him.

[SYLVIA, RHODA, and DUDLEY appear outside the window.

LADY VIVASH.

Reject him—yes. But Sylvia ?

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Why, at the worst it is only a child's first love—nothing more.

LADY VIVASH.

It need be nothing more. Ah, I know what the child's first love means to the grown woman !

SYLVIA re-enters the room.

SYLVIA.

Mamma, won't you——? [She stops suddenly, looking into LADY VIVASH's face.] Lady Gillingham has been speaking to you about me !

LADY VIVASH.

Yes—dear.

SYLVIA.

I—I am so sorry, Mamma.

LADY VIVASH.

Sorry ?

SYLVIA.

So sorry that—that Mr. Lee cannot get to London until Wednesday.

[LADY GILLINGHAM goes to RHODA and DUDLEY, outside in the garden.]

LADY VIVASH.

[Drawing SYLVIA to her and stroking her head.] Do you really love him, Gossamer ?

SYLVIA.

I think I do—really.

LADY VIVASH.

And if I told you that it is impossible, absurd—that a child's first foolish fancy is to be checked, laughed at, and forgotten—what then?

SYLVIA.

Then I should know you were not in earnest.

LADY VIVASH.

Not in earnest?

SYLVIA.

No. Mamma, do you remember, once, when you were in bitter trouble, taking me upon your lap and telling me of your first love?

LADY VIVASH.

Gossamer—yes!

SYLVIA.

Of some one who came to Bruges, painting, just before you left your school—some friend of Mr. Silchester's?

LADY VIVASH.

Yes.

SYLVIA.

He followed you to London—you loved him, Mamma dear; you told me so!

LADY VIVASH.

[In a whisper, trembling.] Ah, yes!

SYLVIA.

But one day in a fit of jealousy you sent him away from you, and you never saw him again.

LADY VIVASH.

Never again !

SYLVIA.

But, " Sylvia," you said to me, " a woman's first love is her religion ; if its object be worthy it will sanctify her whole life." And, Mamma, that is why I know you will let me go on loving Mr. Lee.

LADY VIVASH.

[With a cry of tenderness, pressing SYLVIA to her.]
My darling ! my darling !

PETCH enters with a small bundle of letters upon a salver.

PETCH.

Lady Gillingham's carriage !

LADY GILLINGHAM.

[Re-entering the room.] Oh, how time flies ! Mary, I must catch the two o'clock train to Ketterby. I have promised to fetch Lord Gillingham up to town.

PETCH.

[Giving letters to DUDLEY, who has come into the room.] Your servant has just brought these letters, sir, in case you might not return home till late.

DUDLEY.

Thank you.

[PETCH goes out as BARGUS comes in followed by MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.]

LADY GILLINGHAM.

[To LADY VIVASH.] Do let me take Sylvia with me to Ketterby!

LADY VIVASH.

Oh, no, no! We have been so long parted.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

My dear Mary, we shall return to town on Wednesday—the day after to-morrow.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

In my opinion, on the eve of our great Meeting even the society of her daughter is a most dangerous distraction to Lady Vivash.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

I think so too, and I've a delicious plan in my head. On Wednesday night Lord Gillingham and I have some friends and some music at Kensington—all sorts of dear nice people: you will come, of course, Mary?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Um—on Wednesday night we have a Financial Committee.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

And if dear Mrs. Boyle-Chewton will dispense with ceremony and bring her daughter——?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

H'm! I shall be glad to carry my opinions and convictions into aliens circles. Thank you, Lady Gillingham.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

[To DUDLEY.] Mr. Silchester, I depend on you too, and——

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Introducing Mr. BARGUS.] Lady Gillingham—my friend and associate, Mr. Clarence Bargus—Member for the Skipping-Molton Division of Cuddleford.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

And perhaps Mr. Bargus——?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Mr. Bargus will be very happy.

BARGUS.

[Nervously.] Very happy—delighted! [To himself with an eye on LADY GILLINGHAM.] Exceedingly pretty woman. [Checking himself.] Ahem! tush!

LADY GILLINGHAM.

I'll send cards to you all to-night. [Quietly to LADY VIVASH.] Mary—Mr. Ira Lee will be there; he reaches London on Wednesday morning. Don't you see my scheme? You will be able to survey him before he makes his first advances.

PETCH re-enters.

PETCH.

Lady Gillingham's coachman says he can only just get to the station in time.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Oh dear! my husband hasn't seen me for four months—he'll think it so odd if I miss the train. [Kissing LADY VIVASH.] Good-bye, Mary. I may have Sylvia, may I not? [LADY VIVASH embraces SYLVIA passionately.] Good-bye everybody—till Wednesday. Good-bye! good-bye! Good-bye! Sylvia!

[Going to the door, SYLVIA running after her.]

LADY VIVASH.

Sylvia! [SYLVIA returns to LADY VIVASH, who embraces her again.] Gossamer, you won't forget me—your mother—will you?

SYLVIA.

Oh, Mamma dear!

LADY GILLINGHAM.

[Impatiently.] O dear, O dear!

SYLVIA.

[Going.] Good-bye! Good-bye! Good-bye!

[LADY GILLINGHAM and SYLVIA go out, followed by PETCH.]

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

And now, if Lady Vivash's mind is quite clear, Mr. Bargus will resume.

BARGUS.

[Oratorically.] The question is in a nutshell. Of what is Woman capable? Woman is——

DUDLEY.

[Who has been opening and reading his letters.] Good heavens! [To BARGUS.] I beg your pardon—allow me, one moment!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Really, Dudley!

DUDLEY.

[Softly to LADY VIVASH, who has dropped thoughtfully into a chair.] Lady Vivash—Mary! I'm a poor unlucky devil, but I'm not so wrapped up in myself that I can't feel glad at bringing you this good news.

LADY VIVASH.

Good news!

DUDLEY.

Strange news! Philip Lyster is living.

LADY VIVASH.

Living!

DUDLEY.

And in England—or will be almost directly. [Handing her a letter.] Look!

LADY VIVASH.

[With a gasp.] Philip's—writing!

DUDLEY.

Read it.

LADY VIVASH.

[Trying to read the letter.] I can't—I can't—make it out. Tell me what he says.

[She returns the letter. DUDLEY stands by her side; she sits staring forward eagerly.]

DUDLEY.

It is written from Paris, yesterday. [Reading.] “My dear Dudley. The dead returned to life! I have come into your world again—changed—another man—but still your friend as of old, if you will have it so. I don't quite know the hour of my reaching England, but I do know that I am to burst upon London Society next Wednesday night at a party at Lord Gillingham's——”

LADY VIVASH.

Oh!

DUDLEY.

[Resuming.] “Come to me at Stark's Hotel at latest the day following.—PHILIP LYSTER.”

LADY VIVASH.

At Lord Gillingham's?

DUDLEY.

Lady Gillingham didn't mention——

LADY VIVASH.

She doesn't know that Philip and I were ever acquainted. Philip! Come back!

DUDLEY.

Come back—yes. I think, Mary, I shall go to Palermo after all. [To BARGUS.] I beg your pardon.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Now, Mr. Bargus.

BARGUS.

The question is in a nutshell. Of what is Woman capable?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Mary, pray listen!

BARGUS.

Is this superficial sentiment, which is so popular, called Love, to be the only——?

LADY VIVASH.

Come back! come back!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Mary!

LADY VIVASH.

I—I can't remain. I—I am going out!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Going out!

LADY VIVASH.

To Madame Lisette's.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

To Madame Lisette. Not the dressmaker!

LADY VIVASH.

Yes. I—I must look something like my old self on Wednesday night!

[She rushes out. They look after her in consternation.]

THE SECOND ACT

The Scene is a richly-appointed Ante-room at LORD GILLINGHAM'S, with a large opening leading to the drawing-rooms, and showing a distant conservatory with a fountain playing. On the right is a recess furnished with settees, palms, and candelabra, over the entrance to which is a curtain fastened back. On the left are large French windows opening into the garden, which is bright with moonlight.

There is the sound of music in the distance. MR. WADE GREEN is sitting in the corner with his eyes closed. He is a young man, with weak eyes, spectacles, and little perky whiskers; when nobody is looking at him his countenance is most melancholy, but directly he is observed he assumes a facetious expression. LADY LIPTROTT, a tall, gaunt, withered woman, with a deep gruff voice and black ringlets, dressed showily but in execrable taste, and the HON. GEORGE LIPTROTT, her son, an insipid, ultra-modern young gentleman, stroll in from the garden.

LADY LIPTROTT.

George.

GEORGE.

Yes, Ma?

LADY LIPTROTT.

We'll sit about in the music-room for half-an-hour and then go on to the Beauchamps'. The Gillinghams' entertainments are always so insufferably tiresome.

GEORGE.

Yes, it's awfully slow, Ma. [GREEN, hearing voices, rises, yawns wearily, shakes himself, and emerges from the corner with his most humorous expression.] H'are yah?

GREEN.

H'are yah? [GREEN loiters away.

LADY LIPTROTT.

[To GEORGE.] I know that man's face—who is he?

GEORGE.

Why, Ma, that's Wade Green, the man who's so awfully entertaining at the piano with those frightfully amusing songs—don't you know. When he sings it's as much as people can do to keep from laughing. [To GREEN.] H'are yah?

GREEN.

[Stifling a yawn and turning briskly.] You quite well?

GEORGE.

Thanks. You going to sing?

GREEN.

Um. A little thing of last season's.

GEORGE.

Haw? Then do you go on to the Beauchamps' by any chance?

GREEN.

I shall pop in.

GEORGE.

Will you sing thah?

GREEN.

Ye-es. A little thing I used to do years ago.

GEORGE.

Haw! Were you at Mrs. Phillamore's this afternoon?

GREEN.

Yes—very enjoyable.

GEORGE.

Did you sing thah?

GREEN.

Oh, a little thing they always ask for—one of my old little things.

GEORGE.

Haw! It will be awful fun when you do something new, won't it?

[As GREEN walks away he meets LORD GILLINGHAM entering, a handsome old gentleman, slightly deaf.]

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Ah, Mr. Green, they miss you very much in there.

GREEN.

[Raising his voice.] Just going in—just going in.

[He still loiters about with his hands in his pockets.]

LORD GILLINGHAM.

[Seeing LADY LIPTROTT.] You're not going, are you? Lady Gillingham has been looking for you. There's some music in there.

LADY LIPTROTT.

[Raising her voice.] What a charming night!

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Outside?

LADY LIPTROTT.

Here.

LORD GILLINGHAM.

[Courteously.] So glad.

LADY LIPTROTT.

[To GEORGE.] That man is breaking up.

GEORGE.

Rapidly.

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Ah, George!

GEORGE.

[Raising his voice.] Delighted you're looking so much better!

[LORD GILLINGHAM smiles and nods, but as LADY LIPTROTT and GEORGE go out he gapes wearily; GREEN, who is sauntering about aimlessly, does the same; they turn and surprise each other at it.

GREEN.

[Rather embarrassed, resuming his comic manner.] Hah! um! Yes—I'm—I'm just going in—just going in.
[He disappears quickly.

A Servant enters.

SERVANT.

[Announcing.] Mr. and Mrs. Hawley Hill.

MR. and MRS. HAWLEY HILL, a stout couple, enter, but LORD GILLINGHAM has his back to them and does not notice them.

HAWLEY HILL.

We can't give them long, Adelaide.

MRS. HAWLEY HILL.

Isn't that Lord Gillingham? [They approach.

LORD GILLINGHAM.

[Smiling pleasantly.] You are not going, are you? Lady Gillingham has been looking for you. There's some music in there.

MRS. HAWLEY HILL.

[Raising her voice.] Just come.

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Eh?

MRS. HAWLEY HILL.

We've just come.

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Oh, how d'ye do? How d'ye do? Let us find my wife?
[He takes them towards the drawing-rooms.]

SERVANT.

[Announcing.] Mr. Silchester.

Enter DUDLEY SILCHESTER.

LORD GILLINGHAM.

[To the HILLS.] Ah, there she is!

MR. AND MRS. HAWLEY HILL.

My dear Lady Gillingham——! [They go out.]

LORD GILLINGHAM.

[Seeing DUDLEY.] You're not going, are you? Lady Gillingham has been looking for you; there's some music in there.

DUDLEY.

Just come! How are you?

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Ah ! How are you ? Mr. Silchester, isn't it ?

DUDLEY.

How's Lady Gillingham ?

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Very well. She's better than I am at a party—I get dazed. Lady Gillingham is a wonderful woman. I was born too long ago for her. That's my great fault.

DUDLEY.

[Sympathetically.] Ah !

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Yes. [They stand side by side on the hearth-rug.]

DUDLEY.

Fine May !

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Very. Very fine May.

DUDLEY.

One of the finest Mays I remember.

LORD GILLINGHAM.

English Mays.

DUDLEY.

I mean English Mays.

LORD GILLINGHAM.

May is a fine month abroad.

DUDLEY.

Yes—sometimes.

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Ah, I mean sometimes.

[They turn their heads from each other and gape.]

DUDLEY.

Is Lyster here?

LORD GILLINGHAM.

What Lyster is that?

DUDLEY.

Philip Lyster—Gerald Lyster's son. Went away suddenly years and years ago.

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Don't know him.

DUDLEY.

He wrote to tell me he'd be here to-night.

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Oh, very likely, very likely. There are a great many people here I don't know. A friend of my wife's perhaps. Come along.

[LADY GILLINGHAM, richly dressed, enters.]

LADY GILLINGHAM.

[Shaking hands with DUDLEY.] How do you do? So pleased! [Surprising LORD GILLINGHAM in the middle of a gape.] Theodore! people are looking for you. You're horrid. [To DUDLEY.] He leaves everything to me.

DUDLEY.

I wish he'd leave something to me. I mean, I wish I might assist you. [To himself.] Confound it, what a stupid thing to say!

[SYLVIA enters with the HON. GEORGE LIP-TROTT. She is dressed simply but charmingly in white; she greets DUDLEY, then strolls with GEORGE to the recess.

GEORGE.

Haw! do you ever go to Lord's?

SYLVIA.

Lord's Cricket Ground?—oh, yes.

GEORGE.

Eton and Harrow?

SYLVIA.

Yes.

GEORGE.

Were you thah the yeah before last?

SYLVIA.

Yes—I was.

GEORGE.

Really?

SYLVIA.

Really.

GEORGE.

Then you saw me thah! I played for Eton the yeah before last.

SYLVIA.

Oh!

GEORGE.

Isn't the world absurdly small; the ideah of your being thah when I was thah! Both thah!

[They sit talking.]

SERVANT.

[Announcing.] Mrs. Boyle-Chewton, Miss Boyle-Chewton, and Mr. Bergus.

DUDLEY.

O, lor! the political infant! [Goes out quickly.]

LADY GILLINGHAM.

[In LORD GILLINGHAM's ear.] Here are those people — Mary's friends — the strong-minded ladies — and Mr. Bergus.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON, RHODA, and MR. BARGUS enter, the ladies dressed very plainly in sombre silks.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

How do you do? How do you do? So delighted!

[Introducing.] Lord Gillingham! [to MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.] Is Mary with you?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Grimly.] No. I left Lady Vivash deeply engaged with Madame Lisette, the dressmaker.

LORD GILLINGHAM.

[To BARGUS.] Certainly, very interesting — very interesting.

BARGUS.

My lord, it is a great question in a nutshell! The position of Woman——

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Quite so—yesterday's paper reported your speech very fully.

[LADY LIPTROTT re-enters and is introduced to MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.]

LADY GILLINGHAM.

[To RHODA.] There is Sylvia.

[RHODA goes to SYLVIA, who rises to meet her.]

SYLVIA.

Oh, I'm so glad. Has Mamma come?

RHODA.

No.

SYLVIA.

How late she is! Do sit by me for a moment.

[They sit side by side. Rising, GEORGE finds RHODA next to him instead of SYLVIA.]

GEORGE.

Haw! I think I'll just—if you don't mind—I'll look for my mother! [To himself.] What a dowdy girl!

LADY LIPTROTT.

[To GEORGE, as they meet.] George, look at that extraordinarily-dressed person!

GEORGE.

Yes. I've just seen anotheah!

LADY LIPTROTT.

Ugh! how women can so disfigure themselves I can't imagine. Let us retain the soft docility and gentle exterior which are Heaven's gifts, or let us die. Give me some air outside. [They go into the garden.]

LADY GILLINGHAM.

We mustn't miss Bandinelli, the new violinist.

[BARGUS bobs and bows nervously. LORD GILLINGHAM gallantly escorts MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.]

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[To LORD GILLINGHAM.] Why don't you become one of us?

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Madam, I am all yours.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Join our Union.

LORD GILLINGHAM.

Ah, I haven't thought about it.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Why can't women vote ?

LORD GILLINGHAM.

They can—they tell the men how to.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Why can't women sit ?

LORD GILLINGHAM.

[Puzzled.] They can—can't they ?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

I mean in the House of Commons ! Rhoda !

RHODA.

Yes, Mamma. [BARGUS and LADY GILLINGHAM, LORD GILLINGHAM, and MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON go into the drawing-rooms. RHODA rises.] I suppose I must go, but I hate it.

SYLVIA.

Hate it !

RHODA.

I'm not dressed very nicely ; people stare so.

SYLVIA.

[Putting her arm round her waist.] Shall I come with you ?

[RHODA disengages herself, looking at SYLVIA's dress and then at her own.

RHODA.

Oh no, please don't. Besides, you will want to get rid of me directly Mr. Lee arrives.

SYLVIA.

Mr. Lee ! O, Rhoda, dear, who told you ?

RHODA.

Nobody. I heard Lady Vivash telling Mamma.

SYLVIA.

[Taking RHODA's hand.] Oh, I'm glad you know. For I do want to talk about him so much. He's dark, you know, and is a poet ; they call him the "Poet of the Prairies," in his own country. He's an American, with a soft, low voice ; we've only seen each other three times and a little bit. We met in Florence : do you think it's romantic ? You can buy his poems at the railway station. They're a shilling. Look ! [Taking from her pocket a little volume bound in red silk.] There they are ; I put them in that bright cover. I did say he was dark, didn't I ? Oh, aren't I telling you all about him ?

RHODA.

[Superciliously.] You are, rather.

SYLVIA.

You're not cross are you? I do hope you'll be engaged soon.

RHODA.

[Biting her lips.] Do you! Thank you. Perhaps I'm as much engaged as you appear to be.

SYLVIA.

Oh, I'm so glad! Tell me who it is—oh, do!

RHODA.

If I choose, it is Mr. Bargus.

SYLVIA

[Horried.] Mr. Bargus! Oh, don't!

RHODA.

[In a rage.] I don't know why you should make that face. Mr. Bargus is a Member of Parliament. A Member of Parliament ranks higher than a poet.

SYLVIA.

Oh, I don't think that's a nice thing to say; and Lady Gillingham has told me that there are Members and Members. Besides, a man isn't born a Member of Parliament: Mr. Lee was born a poet.

RHODA.

Indeed! He'd better go back then; they're doing away with hereditary privileges in this country.

SERVANT.

[Announcing.] Mr. Lee!

SYLVIA.

Oh!

IRA LEE enters. He is a tall handsome man of about thirty-seven, with a gentle self contained manner.

LEE.

[Advancing to SYLVIA with a pleasant smile.] Miss Vivash.

SYLVIA.

[Hanging her head.] Mr. Lee.

[RHODA stares at LEE, then turns to go as BARGUS enters.

BARGUS.

Miss Chewton—Rhoda. Your Mamma has delegated me to fetch you.

[RHODA stares contemptuously at LEE and SYLVIA, and seizing BARGUS'S arm, goes out with him.

LEE.

I didn't reach London until five o'clock this afternoon.

SYLVIA.

You must be very weary.

LEE.

Of being parted from you—ah, yes. Is Lady Vivash here?

SYLVIA.

Not yet.

LEE.

Will she be very angry?

SYLVIA.

I think she will be a little angry if you stay with me now.

RHODA.

Very well, then, I'll go and find Lady Gillingham. [Taking her hand.] Suppose your mother, for some reason, dislikes me exceedingly.

SYLVIA.

Oh, don't, please! What is there not to like?

LEE.

So much. Why, look at your little hand in mine; it's like a rosebud on an old Delft plate. I have lived twice as long as you.

SYLVIA. L

You are a poet : you always will. Besides, I think Mamma will like you for being rather old; when she married my papa he was three times her age.

LEE.

No—was he?

SYLVIA.

[Surprised.] Didn't you know?

LEE.

Certainly not. You and I have never had time to talk of anything but the future—and the weather

SYLVIA.

Oh, you're not curious, like women! You could have found out all about Mamma—who she was, whom she married, when she married, when I was born—everything. You ought to be curious about me. I have read your poems.

LEE.

I don't want to know more than that you are sweet and gentle, with a voice that has the meaning of truth in it.

SYLVIA.

But my Mamma?

LEE.

Oh, I have imagined her—a woman with eyes like yours, only sadder; lips like yours, only paler; a voice like yours, only deeper; a woman whose task in life it is to show her child how to grow old beautifully!

SYLVIA.

Thank you. Now go and find Lady Gillingham.

[He raises her hand to his lips tenderly.]

LEE.

Why shouldn't you show me the way to her?

SYLVIA.

It is such a little way.

LEE.

Isn't there a longer way to Lady Gillingham?

SYLVIA.

Oh, yes—through the garden: only it's much longer.

LEE.

Take me the much longer way. [They walk a step or two towards the window; he stops and points to the book she still carries.] May I carry that?

SYLVIA.

Oh! [Handing him the book, which he opens.] Do you think me very silly!

LEE.

I think you ought to be ordered a course of sounder reading.

SYLVIA.

Write your name there, please.

LEE.

[Hesitating a moment.] My name?

[He takes a pencil from his pocket and writes his name; then shows it to her.]

SYLVIA.

“Philip Lyster”! Who’s that?

LEE.

Ira Lee.

SYLVIA.

Is Philip Lyster your real name?

LEE.

It was real to me once.

SYLVIA.

I don’t seem to know you now at all. [Half frightened.] Philip—Lyster.

LEE.

Ira Lee or Philip Lyster—the man is the same.

[Taking her hand and gently drawing it through his arm.]

SYLVIA.

[To herself.] Philip Lyster!

[They walk to the window; the moon shines in upon them; he turns to her.]

LEE.

You trust me, Sylvia?

SYLVIA.

Philip. [Raising her eyes and looking into his face.]
Yes——

[They disappear into the garden. As they go
LADY GILLINGHAM enters quickly.]

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Sylvia ! Sylvia ! Oh where is Sylvia ? As long as I live I'll never chaperon another unmarried girl. [Looking into the corner.] Oh, the dreadful responsibility ! Sylvia !

SERVANT.

[Announcing.] Lady Vivash !

[LADY VIVASH enters quickly ; she is magnificently dressed, her cheeks are bright, her eyes sparkling, her manner hurried and excited.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Mary !

LADY VIVASH.

[Kissing her upon the cheek.] Victoria dear !

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Oh, how beautiful you look !

LADY VIVASH.

Beautiful ? Ah ! I have never looked so ugly in my whole life.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Nonsense. [Laughing.] What will Mrs. Boyle-Chewton say ? What a change !

LADY VIVASH.

Change ! Yes.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Since yesterday.

LADY VIVASH.

What a change since eighteen years ago !

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Mary, what is the matter ? Come with me.

LADY VIVASH

Is Sylvia well ?

LADY GILLINGHAM

[Wonderingly.] Yes, quite well.

LADY VIVASH.

Is her American—Mr.—Mr. Lee here ?

LADY GILLINGHAM.

No—not yet, I think.

LADY VIVASH.

Lovers are not impatient nowadays. I—I—am ready.

[Suddenly LADY VIVASH supports herself on LADY GILLINGHAM'S arm for a moment and then sits faintly.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Mary, you are ill !

LADY VIVASH.

No ; wait. I—I've something to say to you. I didn't know—that—you—were acquainted with—Mr. Lyster.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Mr. Lyster?

LADY VIVASH.

Philip Lyster. I have never told you, but he and I were—friends, years ago. Tell me—how does he look? Stop, let me guess. Worn—with silver hair at the temples—eyes that seem looking away, back. [Pointing to the drawing-room.] Is he there? Shall I meet him? Don't notice us. I shall know him! I shall know him! I shall know him!

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Mary, I know no Mr. Lyster.

LADY VIVASH.

He is to be here—in your house—to-night! I have seen his letter, his own handwriting!

LADY GILLINGHAM.

Then he must be somebody Theodore has invited without consulting me. Let us go and ask.

[She goes to the drawing-room.]

LADY VIVASH.

Yes. [Walking straight across to the mirror and looking into it earnestly.] Then and now—then and now! Oh!

[She turns with a low cry, then goes out as BARGUS enters with MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON from the window, followed by RHODA.]

BARGUS.

[Nervously, apart to RHODA.] Go away for five minutes.

RHODA.

[Apart to him.] What are you going to do?

BARGUS.

Break the news of our engagement to your dear Mamma.

RHODA.

Not here!

BARGUS.

Certainly! Your dear Mamma can't be violently angry here. [RHODA goes out.]

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

You say you wish to speak to me, Mr. Bargus.

BARGUS.

H'm! Mrs. Boyle-Chewton, what I have on my—on my heart might have kept till to-morrow, or next week, but it weighs heavily, and I did not sleep last night for it; so it is better out. The matter is in a nutshell, Mrs. Boyle-Chewton. I am a bachelor.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

You are wedded to our cause, Mr. Bargus!

BARGUS.

Politically; politically, of course, a man may be wedded to many causes—some members are Mormons. Politically I'm all yours.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

We appreciate you.

BARGUS.

Thank you, I am sure you do ; but, domestically, I am all my own. Now, my dear lady, my sentiments concerning this very popular emotion, about which we hear so much, called Love, are known to you. Love reminds me of the goose at one of our little county dinners. There it is at the head of the table, rich and tempting, all eyes upon it, and all mouths watering. Every plate is sent up, and the carver, like Cupid, rises to the occasion—and what is the result ? Only two out of a dozen get a good cut, and before an hour is over those two are extremely sorry for it. But my dear lady, Marriage—two persons walking soberly through life under one umbrella, cheerfully accepting the drippings of Providence down the backs of their necks—that's an elevating spectacle.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Really, Mr. Bergus, I don't see——

BARGUS.

A moment—it is in a nutshell. Politically, I'm already a member of your charming establishment ; politically my slippers already nestle at your genial hearth. There's a great deal of trotting to-and-fro between Regent's Park and myself. Now, Mrs. Boyle-Chewton—I put it humorously—why shouldn't you spare me the journey to the Park in the morning and from the Park in the afternoon ?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Mr. Bergus!

BARGUS.

Take a moment—take a moment!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

It is so sudden. I have never suspected it. All my best friends will accuse me of husband-hunting.

BARGUS.

They can't; they only say that when the lady concerned is not an extremely attractive creature.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Looking away.] Oh, Mr. Bergus!

BARGUS.

They can't say that of a charming face and a most fascinating manner.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Turning to him, warmly.] Be quiet; I am disappointed in you. [Simpering.] You don't mean it! [LADY LIPTROTT and GEORGE enter from the garden and cross the room; MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON immediately speaks loudly, with a change of manner.] The question of the amelioration of the condition of woman, Mr. Bergus, is one that may well profit by the devotion of such great spirits as yourself, not to mention the modest labour—— [LADY LIPTROTT and GEORGE go out by door; MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON turns again to BARGUS]. I have wandered from the point. Go on.

BARGUS.

With regard to Rhoda, I fancy I am not obnoxious to her.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Obnoxious, indeed !

BARGUS.

The event will brighten her life.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

I should think so !

BARGUS.

Would you care to call me—Clarence ?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Not yet—not yet.

BARGUS.

Not to oblige me ?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

No, no !

BARGUS.

Not to delight me ?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Impulsively.] Clarence ! [MR. and MRS. HAWLEY HILL enter from the drawing-room, cross to the door. Loudly.] What future may be in store for woman it is impossible to estimate or predict. But one great fact is assured—one great fact—— [MR. and MRS. HAWLEY HILL disappear.] Clarence, will you speak to Rhoda ?

BARGUS.

Certainly, to-night. If Mr. Silchester is your escort, Rhoda and I might—ahem!—follow in a four-wheeler.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

I don't think that's necessary!

BARGUS.

No—perhaps not. Beg pardon.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

And I have still one condition to impose upon you.

BARGUS.

A hundred—a hundred.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Pointing to the recess.] Shan't we be less liable to interruption in there?

BARGUS.

Shall we? [To himself.] I wish she'd let me get away to Rhoda! [They sit side by side.]

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Clarence, you will not avail yourself of our new relationship to distract my thoughts from the mighty work of Woman's Emancipation?

BARGUS.

[Edging away nervously.] My dear Mrs. Boyle-

Chewton, certainly not—certainly not. Why should I?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

You will not allow your affection for the Wife to weaken your co-operation with the Agitator?

BARGUS.

[Aghast, his eyes starting from his head.] Not allow my affec—my aff——! I beg your pardon!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

You know what I hint at. You won't take me away for our honeymoon till Parliament has risen?

BARGUS.

[Wildly.] Mrs. Boyle-Chewton!

DUDLEY and RHODA come from the drawing-room together.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Hush! don't kneel! [Rising and looking round the corner.] Dudley!

DUDLEY.

Oh, are you there, Edith?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[In a childish voice.] Yes!

[She approaches them, trying to conceal BARGUS, who sinks back.]

BARGUS.

[To himself, with horror.] I see it! It's all in a nutshell. The mother has taken it to herself Oh!

I've gone into the wrong lobby!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Pointing to the recess.] I think Mr. Bargus is there.

DUDLEY.

Is he? [to himself.] Oh yes, there's the infant
[BARGUS advances falteringly.] How d'ye do?

[BARGUS nods but cannot speak.]

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Dudley dear—Rhoda—we three are of one family.
I—I think Mr. Bargus has something to tell you.

DUDLEY.

Indeed!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Something I hope most interesting to Rhoda—my child.

RHODA.

O, Mamma!

MRS. BOYLE CHEWTON.

Already united to us by ties of sympathy, Mr. Bargus asks that he may be allowed to add one more link to the chain by becoming—Rhoda's father.

RHODA.

[Clenching her hands.] Oh!

DUDLEY.

Good gracious!

[He turns and looks at RHODA in blank amazement.]

BARGUS.

[To MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.] He doesn't like it. I can see he doesn't like it. Shall we, for the present—that is, temporarily, you know—a year or two—yield to him!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Doesn't like it! When did I receive sympathy from my brother Dudley? Mr. Bargus, we will take the air before returning to the heated rooms. Your arm. Rhoda, please follow.

[She takes BARGUS's arm and leads him across to the window; as he passes RHODA he gives her a piteous look, his mouth moves without any sound, and he shakes his head violently. She turns from him contemptuously. The three disappear into the garden, leaving DUDLEY, with his hands in his pockets, transfixed.]

DUDLEY.

Good gracious! The infant has grown out of all knowledge. Confound it, Edith ought to have known better. I'll go to the club and drop a line to Bargus. If the babe doesn't listen to reason I'll choke him with his own coral.

A Servant enters.

SERVANT.

Here is Mr. Silchester, my Lady.

DUDLEY.

Eh ?

LADY VIVASH enters, her manner is now quite composed, but her step is heavy and slow, and her face pale.

LADY VIVASH.

Mr. Silchester !

DUDLEY.

Lady Vivash !

LADY VIVASH.

Will you find Sylvia for me ? I think she must be in the garden. Her young American must pay the penalty of being late ; I am going to take his sweetheart home.

DUDLEY.

She'll be a little disappointed.

LADY VIVASH.

[To herself.] She knows her lover will call to-morrow ! Disappointed ! I could teach her what that means. [Sinking wearily into a chair.]

DUDLEY.

You look very tired.

LADY VIVASH.

The rooms are hot—or cold—or something. Find Sylvia and let me go.

[The Servant has drawn the curtains over the window and retired. DUDLEY is going into the garden.]

LADY VIVASH.

[Calling.] Dudley! Isn't it curious about — no Mr. Lyster?

DUDLEY.

It is quite a mystery. You saw his letter?

LADY VIVASH.

I didn't scrutinise it. I suppose it was his handwriting?

DUDLEY.

I suppose so. I have it with me. [Taking the letter from his pocket and reading.] "Next Wednesday night at a party at Lord Gillingham's." They don't know him. Do you recognise the writing?

LADY VIVASH.

Lend me the letter; I'll glance at it when I get home—if I have time.

DUDLEY.

Certainly. [Giving her the letter, her hand trembling as she takes it.] I shall call at his hotel to-morrow.

LADY VIVASH.

You—you are not looking for Sylvia.

DUDLEY.

I beg your pardon.

[He goes out through the curtains into the garden.]

LADY VIVASH.

[Looking at the letter.] The handwriting! Know it! Oh Philip! you taught it to me too well years ago! "At Lord Gillingham's." He must have written that name for some other. I'll find out to-morrow—early to-morrow. [She folds the letter, looks round, then touches her lips with the paper and slips it into her bodice.] Where is Sylvia? Why doesn't she come? I can't endure this place now. [She crosses to the curtains and holds them open: looking up.] How bright! It was moonlight when I sent him away from me. What a mockery it is to-night!

[She goes through the curtains as LADY GILLINGHAM enters with IRA LEE. At the same moment the SERVANT crosses the room.]

LADY GILLINGHAM.

[To the Servant.] Lady Vivash has not gone, Spencer?

SERVANT.

I believe not, my lady. [The Servant goes out.]

LADY GILLINGHAM.

[To LEE.] I am sure Lady Vivash is most anxious to see you. She must be in the rooms. Wait here; I'll find her and bring her to you.

LEE.

You are very kind to me, Lady Gillingham.

LADY GILLINGHAM.

I am afraid I am. Ah, Mr. Lee, lovers are too troublesome.

LEE.

[Taking her hand and bending over it.] Ah, Lady Gillingham, women are too beautiful. [LADY GILLINGHAM smiles and goes out.] Wait here! wait here! to be approved of—or otherwise. To have every grey hair in my head counted, every furrow in my face measured, every pound in the bank weighed. After all, a man on the right side of forty isn't so very old—not so very old. I am only old for Sylvia. Ah, if they don't inspect me quickly I shall be an octogenarian. [His foot touches a little plain gold bracelet which is lying upon the tiger-skin before the fireplace.] What's that! [Picking it up carelessly.] A bracelet. [He is about to place it on the mantelpiece when he catches sight of an inscription upon it.] Great Heaven! [Reading the inscription.] "Philip Lyster to Mary Norbury. For ever and ever."

[The curtains are pushed aside, and LADY VIVASH enters clasping her wrist.

LADY VIVASH.

My bracelet! I have lost my bracelet! [He rises; they come face to face.] Mr. Lyster!

LEE.

[Quietly handing the bracelet.] Are you looking for this? I found it on the ground there.

LADY VIVASH.

[Taking the bracelet from him and trying to command herself.] Thank you. Mr. Silchester mentioned to me that you were thinking of returning to England after—rather a long absence. [Offering her hand.] How do you do? [He takes her hand respectfully and bows without speaking.] I did ask about you early in the evening when I first came, but poor Lord Gillingham was more than usually oblivious. He is much changed. We are all very, very much changed.

LEE

Naturally.

LADY VIVASH.

[Lightly.] I think I should have known you anywhere. You wouldn't, of course, have recognised me if I—if I had not—if——

LEE.

Oh, yes—don't mistake me—I should indeed.

[Their eyes meet, she hangs her head and moves a step or two from him.]

LADY VIVASH.

Old friends ought to feel interested in one another. Have you prospered abroad? Are you—unmarried?

LEE.

Yes—I am unmarried.

LADY VIVASH.

[Stifling a cry.] Oh!

LEE.

Yes, old friends ought to feel interested in one another. Pardon me—have you prospered at home? Are you—unmarried.

LADY VIVASH.

Don't you know?

LEE.

Know what?

LADY VIVASH.

Of my marriage—after—you—left England?

LEE.

No. How soon after I left England?

LADY VIVASH.

Oh Philip! Ah, don't think more hardly of me than you can help. I was mad—I didn't know what I was doing. Heaven pitied me and gave me strength to do my duty; but you, a man, can't think leniently. I know—I know.

[She covers her eyes with her hands. He turns from her respectfully. The curtains move, and RHODA is about to enter; seeing LADY VIVASH she stops quickly, and draws back, listening, closing the curtains carefully.]

LEE.

[After a pause.] You have not told me—how soon after I left England.

LADY VIVASH.

I can't—I daren't. If you had come back it would have been different. Why didn't you come back?

LEE.

Why! Ha! Because I was a foolish, sentimental lad with an ideal which you had shattered. Because I was smarting under the charges of unfaithfulness you had brought against me.

LADY VIVASH.

False charges—they were false, and I knew it. I tortured you with doubts and accusations for the sake of hearing you tell me how deeply you loved me. I quarrelled for the luxury of reconciliation—stabbed for the sake of healing! And you couldn't comprehend a woman's nature.

LEE.

No; because I forgot that it was the patrician ladies who cried "Habet" loudest at the Roman circus. I discovered that you had meant to torture me in play, and I left you, from that moment never to glance back. I made a new man of myself, shunning all chances of hearing of you or reading of you, never letting myself even wonder about you. I was unmanly, you say? Well, men have their excuses even for that—if women are unwomanly.

LADY VIVASH.

But now—we are older, wiser.

LEE.

Now! Oh, it can't matter to either of us now.

LADY VIVASH.

Not matter ! Philip, you don't know me. Listen—you must ! If you wish it, you shall never see me again after to-night—to-night, the cross-road of our later life. But hear me before we part ! While you were shutting your heart upon me in some far-away spot, my heart was bleeding for you ; my eyes ever looking, my ears ever listening for you !

LEE.

Hush !

LADY VIVASH.

I shock you. A married woman ! Yes—but one cruelly treated by her husband. A generous husband might have taught me to forget ; as it was, my love for you was the light I burnt to keep me from stumbling. A little child came ; to hush it to sleep I cried by its cradle the story of my love for you. I prayed for you night and morning ; perhaps my prayers have kept you out of danger !

LEE.

Hush ! Mary !

LADY VIVASH.

[Under her breath.] What have I said ?

LEE.

[Taking her hand firmly.] You have said rightly—this is the cross-road of our lives, and we part. Good-bye !

LADY VIVASH.

Oh !

LEE.

It must be. Because, Mary, both of us are not free.

LADY VIVASH.

Not free! Not free! Ah! I haven't told you! Philip! Yes, I was married—wretchedly married; but now it is past. I am—I am alone again!

[She totters towards him; he recoils.]

LEE.

Mary!

[LORD and LADY GILLINGHAM enter with SYLVIA, who runs down with a glad cry.]

LADY VIVASH.

[Hysterically.] Sylvia!

SYLVIA.

Oh, I am so glad!

LADY VIVASH.

Glad!

SYLVIA.

Then you know each other.

LADY VIVASH.

Know—whom?

SYLVIA.

Mamma dear! [Pointing to LEE.] Mr. Ira Lee!

[LEE staggers back with a cry. LADY

VIVASH stands for a moment as if turned to stone ; then DUDLEY, who has entered from the garden, comes quickly to her and catches her as she is falling. RHODA, MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON, and MR. BARGUS appear in the window as the curtain descends.

END OF THE SECOND ACT.

THE THIRD ACT

The Scene is the Library at MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON'S, as in the First Act, the morning after LADY GILLINGHAM'S party.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON enters from the garden, with a bundle of flowers, which she surveys sentimentally.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Flowers! I feel I have been a little oblivious of the beauty of flowers. This morning I seem to have learnt their language. That little bunch is for me, and that little bunch is for Clarence.

SYLVIA enters in a pretty morning dress and garden hat.

SYLVIA.

Good morning!

MRS. BOYLE CHEWTON.

How is Mamma?

SYLVIA.

Oh, almost quite well, and laughing at herself for giving way to the heat last night.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

The heat! Then she hasn't told you of the strang— [Stopping in confusion.] Ah'm!

SYLVIA.

Not told me—what, dear Mrs. Chewton?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Of—of the strange sensations in her head. [To herself.] I forgot that Rhoda learnt the affair by accident, and that I am supposed to know nothing.

[She sits, arranging the flowers as RHODA enters.

RHODA.

[Sulkily.] Good morning.

SYLVIA.

Good morning.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Childishly.] Good morning, little one.

RHODA.

[Angrily to herself.] Oh! when I was a child I was treated like a woman; now I seem to have suddenly become a baby!

[She sits at the table, and takes up a newspaper, MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON hums a tune, at which RHODA stamps her foot and clutches the paper in a rage. SYLVIA looks from one to the other quite mystified.

RHODA.

Mamma ! [To herself.] Mamma never could sing.

[MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON continues humming unconsciously.

SYLVIA.

[Quietly to RHODA.] Rhoda dear, I am afraid I lost my temper last night and was very unkind. Will you forgive me ?

RHODA.

Oh, certainly—of course.

SYLVIA.

Thank you. And now I'll say what I ought to have said when you told me about Mr. Bargus. I congratulate you with all my heart !

RHODA.

[Looking towards her mother.] Hush ! Be quiet !

SYLVIA.

[Surprised.] Don't you want me to congratulate you ?

RHODA.

[Under her breath.] No—no—there's nothing to congratulate me upon. I mean—I—I—— How is Lady Vivash this morning ?

SYLVIA.

Quite well ; it was only the heat of the room.

RHODA.

The heat of the room ! Then you don't know—— ?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Who is now listening.] Hush ! Rhoda !

SYLVIA.

Don't know—what ?

RHODA.

Oh, nothing.

SYLVIA.

[Looking from one to the other.] Oh, I am afraid there is something you are keeping from me ! You don't think Mamma is really ill, do you ? You would tell me if you thought so !

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Of course ! Lady Vivash is in most excellent health. Why, look at her !

[LADY VIVASH enters ; her face is pale, but otherwise she is quite herself.]

LADY VIVASH.

Good morning !

RHODA and MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Good morning !

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

We are so glad you are better, Mary.

LADY VIVASH.

Thank you. Till last night I had not fainted for years. It was very foolish of me. Did you—did you feel the heat?

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

No—not particularly.

LADY VIVASH.

Did you, Rhoda?

RHODA.

[With meaning, eyeing LADY VIVASH.] No. I was outside the room in which you fainted—outside, by the window.

LADY VIVASH.

By the window? Oh, of course, it was cooler there.

RHODA.

Yes, much cooler.

LADY VIVASH.

[To herself.] She couldn't have heard!

SYLVIA.

[To LADY VIVASH.] Mamma dear, come into the garden and watch for Mr. Lee.

LADY VIVASH.

[Starting.] Mr. Lee!

SYLVIA.

He said he would be here very early in the morning. He was so anxious about you. Do come!

LADY VIVASH.

For a few minutes, darling ; I must be very busy to-day. [To MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON, as SYLVIA runs up to the window.] Edith dear, what with Sylvia's return, and—and the party last night—and—and one thing and another, I have negelected the work which is so near to your heart and mine. But my mind shall never wander again, dear. Forgive me, and let us make up for lost time to-day.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Bashfully.] Um. I don't feel very much inclined for work to-day.

LADY VIVASH.

You—not inclined to work !

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

No.

LADY VIVASH.

But we have a Finance Committee at four o'clock.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Oh, bother the Finance Committee !

LADY VIVASH.

Edith !

DUDLEY enters quickly.

DUDLEY.

Good morning. I am a little early, Edith—but the fact is——

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

You are fortunate. By being early you stand a chance of meeting Clarence—Mr. Bargus. I'm on the look-out for him. [Going to the window and looking out.]

DUDLEY.

[To himself.] Oh, if she only knew that the infant is now on the premises waiting to tell her of the dreadful mistake he has made. Phew! and there she is—on the look-out for him. How can I break it!

[LADY VIVASH comes to DUDLEY's side.]

LADY VIVASH.

[Softly to him.] Dudley.

DUDLEY.

Are you better?

LADY VIVASH.

Quite well. Dudley, Ira Lee—Philip Lyster—is coming here this morning. I have thought over everything and I have decided. Dudley, the knowledge that he was once my lover must be kept from Sylvia.

DUDLEY.

But, my dear Mary!—

LADY VIVASH.

Oh, where would be the good? It was years and years ago and is done with. The secret is quite our own. She loves him dearly; I know him to be a good man. Would you set me, her mother, up between them? Oh, it would be cruel!

DUDLEY.

But is he sure his old affection is quite extinct—with a decent, respectable and heavy monument upon it?

LADY VIVASH.

Sure! My Sylvia is what I was—of course he loves her.

DUDLEY.

And you, Mary—Sylvia's mother?

[She starts and trembles and her eyes droop for a moment.]

LADY VIVASH.

I love only Sylvia.

[She joins SYLVIA at the window.]

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Looking at the clock.] Rhoda, didn't Mr. Bargus say he would be here at ten o'clock?

DUDLEY.

[Nervously.] Oh, my dear Edith that reminds me. Ah—um—Mr. Bargus is here.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Here! and I not informed!

DUDLEY.

Well, the fact is, my dear Edith, he—he's sitting in the Committee Room.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Sitting in the Committee Room! He can't be a Committee all by himself.

DUDLEY.

No—he realises that. He will be all right in a minute.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

He is not well! I see it in your expression; Mr. Bargus is indisposed!

DUDLEY.

Well—yes—that's it. Bargus is a little indisposed.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Oh!

DUDLEY.

He came to me very early this morning, before I was up, in fact, to—to make some explanations. And having had a bad night he asked me to bring him along.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

A bad night! Oh, dear! oh, dear!

[She rings the bell.]

DUDLEY.

Stop! Edith! I think—I fancy he wishes to see you alone.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Of course he does. But I must present him to Mary in his proper light. Mary!

DUDLEY.

No, no! No, no! I've something to tell you!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

I will have no secrets. Mr. Bergus and I have nothing to be ashamed of.

DUDLEY.

Yes, you have—I mean, he has. Oh, wait! wait!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Wait! I ought to have told Mary the first thing this morning. Mary!

DUDLEY.

Oh! here it goes!

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Mary, you will be surprised to hear that Mr. Bergus and I are engaged to be married.

LADY VIVASH.

Edith!

SYLVIA.

Oh, Rhoda!

[RHODA turns away with a cry of rage.]

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

It will take Mr. Bergus's eloquent tongue to tell you our reasons for changing our condition. But the Cause, dear Mary, the great Cause shall not suffer.

PETCH enters.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Petch, Mr. Bargus is in the Committee Room—beg him to come here.

[PETCH goes out.

DUDLEY.

[To himself.] Poor devil! What a muddle I've made of it!

LADY VIVASH.

My dear Edith. [Kissing her.] I hope you will be very happy.

SYLVIA.

And so do I, dear Mrs. Chewton, indeed. Oh, Rhoda has been having such fun with me!

RHODA.

[Angrily.] Oh!

SYLVIA.

Yes, Rhoda told me last night that Mr. Bargus——

RHODA.

[Furiously.] Miss Vivash!

[RHODA goes out into the garden as PETCH enters.

PETCH.

Mr. Bargus!

[BARGUS enters; he is pale and dejected, with a wild look in his eyes, and his appearance generally disordered. PETCH goes out.

BARGUS.

Oh, good morning!

LADY VIVASH.

Mr. Bergus, I have just heard some news which gives me very great pleasure. Let me be among the first to congratulate you warmly. [She takes his hand.]

BARGUS.

[Weakly.] Oh!

LADY VIVASH.

Come, Sylvia, dear.

[LADY VIVASH and SYLVIA go out by the window.]

BARGUS.

Mr. Silchester, why have you done this?

DUDLEY.

I'm desperately sorry—upon my soul I am.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[To BARGUS.] They tell me you are not well. [BARGUS shakes his head helplessly ; she gives him the bunch of flowers.] Those are for you.

[He takes them, and sinks into a chair, she regarding him fondly.]

BARGUS.

[Appealingly.] Mr. Silchester.

DUDLEY.

My dear Edith, it is of no use to beat about the bush any further. The fact is, Mr. Bergus, who mis-trusts his own strength of mind, has begged me to be his spokesman. Edith, Mr. Bargus continues to entertain the highest admiration, the most profound respect for you, but—but——

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

But! but what, Dudley?

DUDLEY.

But he feels it due to himself and to you to say that the events of last night were based upon an entire misunderstanding.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

The events of last night?

DUDLEY.

The—the proposal of marriage.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

The proposal of marriage! Mr. Bargus desires to withdraw it?

DUDLEY.

Well—he places himself entirely in your hands. In point of fact, dear Edith, Mr. Bargus intended to propose for Rhoda—his expressions were ambiguous, and he thought he was doing so when he wasn't. Phew! I hope I make myself perfectly clear.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[After a slight pause.] Quite—quite. So far as I am concerned the matter has been a momentary distraction, nothing more. For Rhoda? Oh, yes, just so. Dudley, thank Mr. Bergus for his promptness. These mistakes are better corrected at the moment. It—it is an amusing error. [Giving way.] Oh, what a fool I've been!

[She sinks into a chair and sobs violently.
BARGUS rises, and DUDLEY energetically waves him towards the door.

DUDLEY.

[Under his breath to BARGUS.] Go away; don't say anything! Get out!

BARGUS.

Oh, I should like to say before I go that Mrs. Boyle-Chewton's magnanimous behaviour under the present distressing circumstances increases my admiration for the generosity of her disposition. She is a noble woman.

DUDLEY.

Get out!

BARGUS.

Mary plans of atonement have suggested themselves to me during the lonely hours of an entirely sleepless night. One of them was to place all my worldly possessions at Mrs. Boyle-Chewton's disposal for charitable distribution. In such a case I should desire the Asylum for Idiots to participate largely.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

[Sobbing.] Oh—h—h—h—!

DUDLEY.

Get out !

BARGUS.

I am about to act on your suggestion. Good day. Er—um, I desire to say, finally, that at half-past five this morning I arrived at the conclusion that I am peculiarly unfitted for public life. To-morrow I apply for the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds. [DUDLEY moves towards the bell.] Thank you, I'll let myself out. Mr. Silchester, I shall remain in town until Tuesday in case you should desire to pursue the matter to a dreadful issue. Good morning!

[He goes out quietly.]

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

Oh, Dudley, take me to my room. I shall never hold up my head again.

DUDLEY.

Yes you will—to-morrow.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

I've been false to my principles !

DUDLEY.

Well, well, everybody is. You can get some new ones.

MRS. BOYLE-CHEWTON.

There's something wrong with us women ! With all our struggles for equality, we are so weak, so incomplete.

DUDLEY.

Of course you are! You'll never make one boot a pair if you polish it till Doomsday!

[He takes her out as SYLVIA's voice is heard outside.]

SYLVIA.

[Appearing outside window.] Remain there, Mamma! I'll fetch your hat and a shawl. [Running across to the door.] I wish he would make haste!

[She runs out at the door as RHODA enters by the window watching her.]

RHODA.

She is not to know then! Her little butterfly wings are not to be fluttered even with the knowledge that her sweetheart's love is very second-hand. Why should everything be so smooth for her and so rough for me? Why shouldn't I tell her the truth?

SYLVIA re-enters carrying a hat and shawl.

RHODA.

[Intercepting her.] Sylvia!

SYLVIA.

I—I must hurry with these to Mamma.

RHODA.

Look here—I want to speak to you. Don't you think it is time that you made people regard you as something better than a doll? Do you think it is just that your mother and your friends should keep you ignorant of what concerns you more than anybody in the world?

SYLVIA.

I am very happy. A great many things I daresay I don't know. If people love me or like me that's all I want to know.

RHODA.

But don't you want to know everything concerning the people you love? Say, for instance, the man you love?

SYLVIA.

Are you speaking of Mr. Ira Lee?

RHODA.

Who is Mr. Ira Lee?

SYLVIA.

Mr. Philip Lyster: he bears two names, both good and honourable.

RHODA.

You do know then—all about him!

SYLVIA.

All about him!

RHODA.

[Contemptuously.] I see. You are more a woman than I thought you. Your cloak, Sylvia, is not so much gossamer as good waterproof. They have taught you, I suppose, that you ought to be well satisfied with second-hand love—when the lover is a poet.

SYLVIA.

What—what do you mean?

RHODA.

Your mother is waiting for her hat and shawl.

SYLVIA.

Rhoda—tell me!

RHODA.

There's nothing more to tell. You know that Mr. Lee Lyster had a sweetheart years ago; you know, I presume, who the lady was; voilà tout! I thought you were too confiding or I shouldn't have bothered you.

[SYLVIA puts the hat and shawl upon the writing table, tremblingly.

SYLVIA.

You—you are mistaken. They have told me nothing. Rhoda—what is it?

RHODA.

Oh, I'd rather not tell you.

SYLVIA.

You must—now. What is it?

RHODA.

Promise to forget that it came from me if I do tell you—never to mention my name.

SYLVIA.

Yes, yes. I promise.

[LADY VIVASH appears at window.

SYLVIA.

Be quick. A sweetheart, years ago—who was she?

RHODA.

I suppose the past tense applies—she is not dead, you know.

[LADY VIVASH enters the room.

SYLVIA.

Far away, then?

RHODA.

No, indeed.

SYLVIA.

Not near us—in our own country?

RHODA.

Quite in our own country—very near us.

SYLVIA.

Who is she?

[LADY VIVASH utters a suppressed cry.

RHODA.

I wonder you don't guess—Lady Vivash.

SYLVIA.

Oh! no!

LADY VIVASH.

Sylvia!

SYLVIA.

Mother!

[LADY VIVASH clasps SYLVIA in her arms, but the girl slips from her and falls on her knees at her mother's feet, burying her face in her hands.]

LADY VIVASH.

[To RHODA.] Leave me with my child, please. [RHODA takes a step or two, and moves her lips as if trying to speak, but her eyes meet LADY VIVASH'S, her head droops, and she goes slowly and silently through the window and out of sight.] Gossamer—look at me. [She stoops and gently raises SYLVIA.] Look at me, dear—your mother.

SYLVIA.

[In a whisper.] Is it true?

[LADY VIVASH shrinks a little, then stands with her face averted, holding SYLVIA'S hand.]

LADY VIVASH.

Yes. [SYLVIA goes back with a faint cry, but LADY VIVASH catches her in her arms and kisses her passionately.] Oh, listen, listen, listen! It is strange, but nothing else. There is no need for you to give even a second thought to a foolish accident—the last weak thread in the remnant of the old past. Sylvia! Sylvia!

[SYLVIA sinks into a chair staring forward vacantly.]

SYLVIA.

Mother!

[LADY VIVASH kneels to SYLVIA, taking her hands and clasping them tremblingly.

LADY VIVASH.

Oh, my darling, my darling! Ah, don't look like that! There is nothing in this—accident that should trouble you. He is yours, heart and soul. Years and years ago he may have had a passing fancy, but the girl he l—liked is now a rigid, prosaic, strong-minded creature whom some men laugh and jeer at. You'll make me believe I've wronged you! Kiss me—your poor mother—your poor mother, who would let you trample on her to save you a moment's pain! My darling! My darling!

SYLVIA.

I haven't heard the name of your boy-lover till now. [In a dream.] Philip Lyster—Philip Lyster.

LADY VIVASH.

You're right—he was only a boy-lover. And love to a lad is a toy, nothing more; when he is tired of it he breaks it and flings it away! You are loved by a man!

SYLVIA.

I see the reason he changed his life and his name—to try to forget everything—himself—his love.

LADY VIVASH.

And he did forget! he did forget!

SYLVIA.

Yes—but, mother dear, you have not forgotten !

LADY VIVASH.

[Rising, aghast.] Sylvia !

SYLVIA.

Do you think I don't remember the story of your love as you told it to me one day when you were in trouble, when you said to me "Sylvia, a woman's first love is her religion." Ah, I remember, I remember—so well.

LADY VIVASH.

[Sinking into a chair.] Oh, my child ! my child !

SYLVIA.

[Going to LADY VIVASH.] Forgive me, mother. It is I who have brought trouble upon you, not you upon me. [Kneeling at her feet, LADY VIVASH sobs bitterly.] Hush, mother dear, mother dear ! I was selfish ever to think of leaving you. We'll never part, dear ; we'll never part.

LADY VIVASH.

[In agony.] Oh, what have I done to you ! What have I done to you ! What have I done to you !

DUDLEY enters.

LADY VIVASH.

[Advancing to meet DUDLEY.] Dudley !

DUDLEY.

Here is Philip, Mary.

LADY VIVASH.

[Under her breath.] Philip!

[The two women look at each other. SYLVIA walks slowly to LADY VIVASH, kisses her, and goes softly out at the window.

DUDLEY.

Mary, Sylvia knows?

[LADY VIVASH bows her head.

LADY VIVASH.

[With an effort.] Tell him to come to me.

[DUDLEY goes to the door and beckons to LEE, then goes and stands outside the window, as LEE enters.

LEE.

Lady Vivash.

LADY VIVASH.

She knows. My child knows!

LEE.

Oh!

LADY VIVASH.

Help me! Help me!

LEE.

Tell me how. Tell me.

LADY VIVASH.

You do love her truly? [Entreatingly.] You do, you do?

LEE.

I do.

LADY VIVASH.

Then by your love for that girl who has never known an unhappy moment until to-day; out of pity for the wretched woman who wounded you years ago——

LEE.

Ah, Mary, hush——!

LADY VIVASH.

Yes, out of compassion for me, do your utmost to remove the sorrow which has fallen upon my child. [LEE makes a despairing gesture.] Ah, don't hesitate. Try, try to comprehend the position in which I am. It is no longer mother and daughter with Sylvia and myself, it is woman and woman. Ah, don't hesitate!

LEE.

What—what do you bid me do? [Burying his face in his hands.]

LADY VIVASH.

Convince her that your love for her is the real love of your life; declare to her that your old boyish infatuation was nothing but a flame which you smothered with a stamp of your foot. You must win back her trust and confidence. You must make her happy again. You hear me—you must—you must.

LEE.

And then, Lady Vivash? What then? Is there no future to reckon for? Are there no ghosts to rise, no seeds of distrust to break their husks, spring up and bear fruit? What of the future?

LADY VIVASH.

The future! Listen, Philip Lyster. I love my child. She is all I live for now. But if I could know she was happy, I could be content to live out the rest of my life away from her; never to disturb her; never to break in upon her peace; never by a sight of my face to make her think.

LEE.

Oh, Lady Vivash!

LADY VIVASH.

You understand what I mean? If you can make her happy, I will go away from you both. The man she loves is more to a girl than the mother who loves her, and I will pay a mother's penalty; a little heavier than most mothers pay—but—I will pay it to the full. [Faintly clutching at the back of a chair, then recovering herself, and holding out her hand to LEE.] Philip Lyster, won't you help me?

LEE.

[Looking at her distractedly and irresolutely, then taking her hand.] Yes, I will help you.

LADY VIVASH.

Ah, you will do your utmost?

LEE.

I will do my utmost. I promise.

LADY VIVASH.

Oh, I thank you.

LEE.

Hush ! hush !

LADY VIVASH.

Yes, I thank you. I bless you. May I go and find Sylvia now ?

LEE.

Yes; yes.

LADY VIVASH.

Wait then, wait. [Going slowly to the window, and catching at the curtain, she sees the bracelet on her wrist; then turning to look at LEE, who stands staring forward, she removes the bracelet and creeps towards him.] The bracelet.

[LEE looks up with a start, and takes the bracelet which she hands him, with averted face, then she goes out.]

LEE.

[Seeing DUDLEY outside.] Dudley ! [DUDLEY approaches.] Give me your hand. [They grip hands.] Old friend, say good-bye to me.

DUDLEY.

Philip ! What are you going to do ?

LEE.

My utmost to heal the sorrow I have brought upon Mary and Sylvia. I have come into their lives to their cost—to my cost I will go out of their lives to-day as if I had died at this very hour.

DUDLEY.

Does Mary know?

LEE.

Not yet. Tell her, Dudley, that I have kept my promise—that I have done my utmost.

DUDLEY.

Oh, Philip, is there no way but this?

LEE.

None. You know it, Dudley. Once my shadow is taken from the lives of these two women, there will be light again. I pray to time to do the rest. Time will bless some worthier man than I with Sylvia's sweet companionship, and then the first laugh from Sylvia's lips will wake Mary from her long dream. You will be near them still, Dudley—always?

DUDLEY.

Always. I am too old a watch-dog to know any voice but Mary's. [They shake hands.]

LEE.

God bless you! This is the only way.

[Bows his head on DUDLEY's shoulder.]

DUDLEY.

They are coming.

LEE.

[With emotion.] Let me see them once more together. Let me see them when they know that I have gone. Tell them.

[LEE goes out at one window, as LADY VIVASH and SYLVIA enter at another, without seeing him.

LADY VIVASH.

[Quietly to DUDLEY.] Dudley, Philip has something to tell Sylvia which I want her to hear from his lips alone. Where is he?—let us find him. Come.

[Going towards the door.

DUDLEY.

[Stopping her.] Mary—Sylvia.

LADY VIVASH.

Dudley!

DUDLEY.

I have some news to break to you. We shall see Philip no more. He has gone. [LADY VIVASH and SYLVIA meet each other's eyes with a fixed look.] Mary, Philip asks me to tell you that he has kept his promise. He has done his utmost.

[LADY VIVASH goes to SYLVIA and they tenderly embrace. DUDLEY goes to the window and looks out; then LEE re-enters silently, looks at the two women, grips DUDLEY's hand, and disappears.

THE END.
